

DNA test to spare many from chemotherapy

London: Millions of breast cancer patients could safely avoid chemotherapy, according to an international study that found a DNA test can identify those unlikely to benefit from the treatment, BBC reported.

The trial, led by University College London (UCL), involved over 4,000 newly diagnosed breast cancer patients aged over 40 in the UK, Norway, Sweden, Australia, New Zealand and Thailand. Researchers used the Prosigna gene test to assess the activity of 50 genes linked to cancer growth and estimate the risk of recurrence.

Two-thirds of participants received low-risk scores and were treated with hormone therapy instead of chemotherapy. Their five-year survival rate was 93%, compared with 94.9% among patients who received chemotherapy. Chemotherapy can cause fatigue, nausea, hair loss, fertility problems and a weakened immune system. It is commonly recommended after surgery to reduce the risk of cancer returning and is often offered to patients whose cancer has spread to nearby lymph nodes.

Researchers said the findings could allow over 5,000 patients annually to avoid the treatment and its side effects. Leading cancer specialist Professor David Miles dubbed the results "practice-changing", saying doctors can identify patients unlikely to benefit from chemotherapy.
